Furniture design doesn't happen in a vacuum. Stunning interiors are the result of individual pieces working in concert, of creating a coherent environment. I enjoy the design process, which can include meticulous historical reproductions, adaptations of classic furniture styles or completely new conceptualizations. I collaborate with architects, interior designers and private clients, many of whom return to me for repeat commissions, year after year." —Eric Englander

Originally trained in theatrical design (Eric holds an MFA from the Tisch School of the Arts at New York University), after several years of theater work he chose to devote himself to making furniture in which the craftsmanship would endure. At Boston's venerable North Bennet Street School he mastered the age-old skills of traditional joinery, carving, inlay, marquetry and veneer work. Out of his New York studio he produces exceptional furniture in a variety of styles — from Biedermeier and Nouveau to mid-century modern and contemporary — all painstakingly researched and exquisitely constructed.
